Dataset name	Households
Description	Households are social groups, having individuals as members. A narrow definition would restrict the term to groups of individuals, who live and eat together, but ACDIS uses a wider definition allowing also for non-resident household members. We replace "share food, prepare and eat together" by "largely share the same resources" or - easier to apply in the field - "care for each other / would care for each other, if need be". A second criterion in a more or less traditional setting is that the members agree on one individual being the Household Head. If there are several heads, there are usually several households. A third criterion – imposed by the fact that much of our data collection involves interviewing proxy informants - is, that members know about each other, at least as far as basic information such as name, relationship to the household head, and place of residence is concerned. Households are often families or extended families, whose members are related by blood ties or formally established relationships, but may sometimes go well beyond to also include resident domestic workers as affiliated members. They are clearly distinguished from “clans” (in the sense of relatives of common descent sharing the same forefather and surname). While the members of a household may be spread over several places, the household itself has exactly one residence (i.e. location) at a time. At any point in time every resident individual must have membership to a household that is resident at the same place. A household migrates or ends with the migration or death of its last member
